Unsubstantiated Alternate surnames found in the SGGEE Master Pedigree Database- 31 May 2007

The following is a list of unsubstantiated alternate surnames found in the SGGEE Master Pedigree Database. These unsubstantiated alternates were provided by SGGEE members, or were created by the merging of the data from more than one member (merging of non-identical data results in an "or" between two non-identical names), and are noted with a ~ sign at the end of each set of alternates.

Note that none of the name variations below include the substitution of an ä for ae, an ö for oe, a ü for ue, or a ß for ss, but those are yet other variations of the names listed below. Also note that none of the Polish language diacritical marks are included in the following alternates, so those are yet other variations of many of the names listed that you may encounter in the original records.

There are many other variations of these names in the SGGEE database that are not shown as alternates here, because our members have not indicated that they represent alternates of the data they submitted. For instance, members have submitted the name "Keyser" and "Kezer or Kozer", but no one has submitted the name "Keyser or Kezer." To establish yet more alternates, you may wish to do a search in the web-based database for a beginning letter combination in the case mentioned, you would do a search for just the letters "Ke".

Even if you do not see an alternate name listed for the surname you are checking in this list, pay attention to the variations in the other names to get an idea of how your surname might be transformed on a record that you have not yet seen, or have seen but did not comprehend was the same surname you seek. Also pay attention to the variations in the adjoining names that are similar to the surname you seek.

Because of the various sources used by our members for the names in this list, there is no guarantee that a specific alternate name in this list was actually used by your ancestors. You will also have to decide for yourself whether the names in this list are really alternates that you are likely to find in your research, or whether they are simply an aberration in the data used to prepare this list. Do not discount alternates prematurely, however, since some pretty bizarre alternates really are equivalent names, especially if one of the alternates is the Polish equivalent of the German name (for instance, Kirschbaum =Wisniewski= cherry tree). Even same language names are sometimes alternates, as in Jaeger (=hunter in English) and Geiger (=fiddler in English), that are not at all equivalent German names, but were in fact used interchangeably in the Polish and Russian sections of at least one birth record.

The reasons for the alternate names seem to exist for at least the following reasons:

1. There was a real name change (either a small or large spelling variation or an outright and complete change that is not connected to the previous name)
2. The German name was converted to a Polish or Russian or English equivalent

3. The person supplying the information did not know the maiden name of a woman, but rather only knew one or more of her married surnames.
4. The descendant of the person, or one of the various record keepers wrote what they heard. These sounds-like variations may have been caused hundreds of years ago, and were likely dependent on the education and nationality of the person recording the name (that is, a Polish or Russian or English immigration officer or pastor was biased by his own education and language as to how he would spell a name), the education of the person giving the name (if the person declaring the birth, marriage or death could not read the language of the record being written on his or her behalf, then he could not correct the incorrect spelling).
5. Spelling was not standardized until at least the late 1800s. Accordingly, there were no accepted ways to spell before that time. Note also that if the ending letter of a surname is "a", "e" or "i", then the ending may represent nothing more than the was extracted from a sentence that described the gender of the person noted in the sentence. Thus the names Wodzinska and Wodzinski are almost certainly the same name, but the former one refers to a woman, and the later one refers to a man. Likewise, the names Turz or Turzow and Zado or Zadow are almost certainly the same names, but the later name of each pair was likely extracted from a Polish sentence that contained the surname.
6. German script and handwriting in general, can be very difficult to read. Accordingly, it is not at all unusual for spelling to be different from one record to the other simply because the person transcribing the record could not correctly read the previous record. For instance, even in a typed English word, it is often difficult to tell the difference between the letter "r" next to the letter "n", and the single letter "m". Can you see the difference between "rn" and "m"? There are often similar differences between the cursive form or an "S" and a "Z", a "B" and and "R", and other letters
7. Sometimes the original records are wrong because the recorder of that record was confused, and wrote the wrong name in the wrong place. For instance, it is evident in some of the records extracted that the wife's name was written once as the wife, and again in the location reserved for the mother of the husband.
8. Sometimes the submitter of the data simply misspelled the surname, or wrote the wrong name down. For instance, Kroll and Krol are indicated as being equivalents, but are not really equal. Krol is the Polish version of Koenig (both translate to King in English), but this is not the same as Kroll which is a completely different word.
